

Add tests to users or groups

Explain how it works

The update includes group and user deployment exceptions. A test availability exception is a set of new settings on the Test Options page. The new setting allows instructor to select one or more group of students and make a number of exceptions to the already established availability settings. Exceptions can be used to provide accommodation to disabled student or to provide accommodations for technology and language differences. The test results and feedback are only available after the test is completed. Test can now be released to individual student instead of all students. Settings can be changed at any time, even after the test has been attempted by some students. When using groups in a test, the instructor must first create the groups before they can add them to the test settings page. Instructor will get a warning message ⚠ if one or more test availability exceptions have membership conflicts. There is an option to limit the number of attempts the students can complete a test to single, multiple and unlimited.
